Another enlargement of European Union as well as processes of globalization and their consequences cause a lot of ambiguity and result in intense academic debates. Therefore, activities directed both at clarification of the matters and increase in knowledge of the current issues should be supported. Publication of the first academic Humanitas Journal of European Studies published jointly by the Institute of European Studies at the Humanitas University in Sosnowiec and by the Lancashire Law School at the University of Central Lancashire is one example of such support.

The Journal publishes articles on all aspects of European studies and encourages analytical (rather than purely descriptive) work with a contextual, comparative and interdisciplinary approach. The major focus is on the practical aspects of comparative European studies in the globalised world. The Journal covers the interdisciplinary fields of comparative European Politics and European Legal Studies, concerning law, politics, economy, educational policy and society. The following are examples of subject matters: Politics and Policy of the EU, European Economy, European Society, European Union External Policies and International Relations.

We hope that papers published in HJES will provide the important source of knowledge not only for students, but also for academic researchers working in various fields of European Studies. Editors expect that the Journal will become a discussion forum for exchanging knowledge and ideas among the international academic community.
